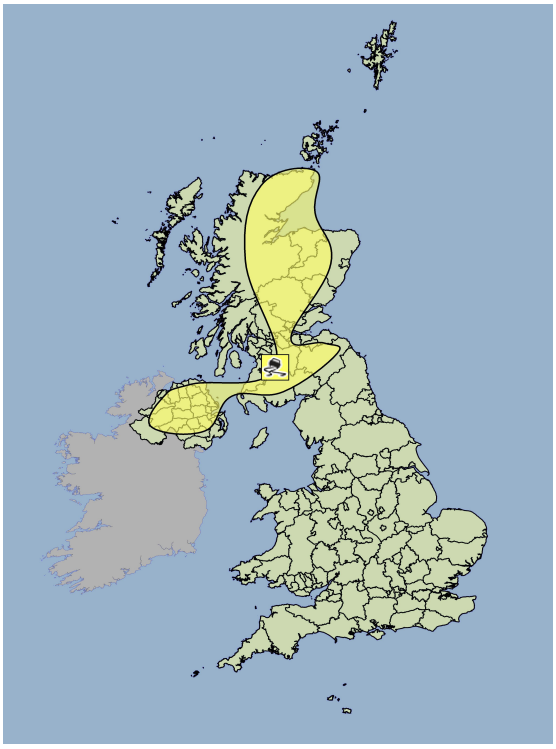
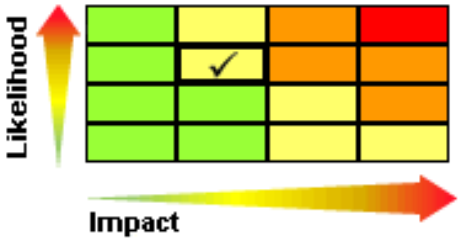
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A much colder airmass than of late will spread across the north of Britain later on Thursday and overnight into Friday, bringing with it the risk of wintry showers and icy patches.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:15 on Fri, 21st Mar 2014 until 09:00 on Fri, 21st Mar 2014

Icy patches are expected in places later tonight, especially on upland roads that are wet from showers. These showers will fall as sleet, hail or snow in places, perhaps with more than 5 cm along some of the higher routes in the northern half of Scotland.

The public should be aware of possible slippery surfaces during the first part of Friday morning.
